Do Re Mi: Senior Project Breakdown

In the beginning, I sang a little song to ease into the presentation and instill some learning with the mention of the three branches of government. I highlight what I'm going to be talking about. I bring up music first to remind everyone that the word "music" takes on many hats. So why not bring it into the field of education? Then, a touch of nostalgia benefits to remind the listener of how they learned about things growing up. It's a very simple psychology of some children having an elapsed attention span and wanting to make learning fun. This is the first point I make about music in general and how adding music really helps you retain the information. Next, I sang a song from my childhood that has shown great impact throughout my school years. It simultaneously serves as a form of entertainment and education. Then, the relevance that the song has in my life as I went from elementary to middle school.

The first outlet I mentioned was Schoolhouse Rock. People back in the day and now have been impacted by it because of the lessons within the core subjects and finances with some eclectic beats to accompany it. The second outlet is Sesame Street as I give a little hint with the theme song. I bring up Sesame Street to teach, however, not just about the core subjects but just the subjects of kindness and how to be good people. That leads to the next two songs that are mentioned as I transition to my next point about language learning. Thirdly, I talk about how I grew up and learning about different artists along with the music and colloquial words that came with it. Lastly, I make it clear to the listener that they should still listen to the teacher and the work that's being given, but if they wish to dive deeper into the topic in question. I appreciate music deeply and I've learned a lot from it and hopefully, the reader can too.
